

TIMES

E. 37,868

JUL 19 1961

Air Alarm

KHRUSHCHEV made a speech across the sky, as he did on July 9, 1961, the United States Senate grows restless. The preparedness investigating subcommittee officials of the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, Intelligence and Allen W. Dulles, Central Intelligence Agency director, are being held for development and missile power. The senators explain they want to learn the significance of the aerial might unveiled by the Russian.

A Senate committee which was "leveled" would not have to call up the officers to explain facts that were known before Khrushchev put on his air show. The Senators, if they had, would have the answers.

The Air Force report, however, says that the Soviet Union is not yet capable of launching a surprise attack on the United States. The report also says that the Soviet Union is not yet capable of launching a surprise attack on the United States. The report also says that the Soviet Union is not yet capable of launching a surprise attack on the United States.

The Air Force report, however, says that the Soviet Union is not yet capable of launching a surprise attack on the United States. The report also says that the Soviet Union is not yet capable of launching a surprise attack on the United States. The report also says that the Soviet Union is not yet capable of launching a surprise attack on the United States.